Dear Graduate of 1968:

It is with pride and pleasure that I congratulate you on the successful completion of your undergraduate course at Loyola.

These last few years have been a time of growth for Loyola, hence, a time of risk, decisions, uncertainties and achievements. They have been a time of visible growth, for all to see: but they have also been, in a more significant way, a time for the Loyola family to grow in mind, personality, and purpose. In all this period, students have made a constructive and notable contribution to Loyola's growth.

Something that has already begun is not yet fully understood either in itself or in its possible implications. I refer to the debate (perhaps "struggle" is a better word) over POWER: student power, faculty participation in governance, establishment, the rights of taxpayers. Here is an issue, though it may not go to the heart of the matter, which consumes much psychic energy universally in the campus world. And here is an issue that will continue to do so until we arrive at a more human and responsible understanding of power. Your going from campus will not free you from fathoming the meaning of power and its uses in human society.

These years, I repeat, have been a time of growth for Loyola. If they have alerted you to the issues facing contemporary society, and whetted your eagerness to contribute a truly human answer to some of those issues, then they have been a time of growth for you personally.

I hope that among your riches you can count a readiness to do everything that is to be done with respect for the truth, with freedom of spirit, in spite of obstacles within and without, in the teeth of selfishness, sloth, cowardice, popular opinion, and with confidence.

Once again, my congratulations and best wishes. You will have your own specific tasks, but you will, I trust, find the zeal and wisdom to create, as you can, peace, justice and brotherhood among men. God bless you.

Yours sincerely,

Patrick J. Malone

F. R. A.

This year's F.R.A. committee chairmen.

It is late September and the scene is set. One thousand Freshmen prepare to descend on the Loyola campus.

And there to greet them are the happy healthy hard-working men and women of the Freshmen Reception Association, who have been at it all summer waiting for this, the big moment.

At zero hour, they sally forth from the office, smiling and clapping one another on the shoulder. Off to registration. Hooray, hooray, we are going to make money today.

Day after day, the cheerful faces flooded the campus. At the Car Wash, at the Sock Hop, at the Variety Show and the Fashion Show, at the Freshette Tea and at the crowning event, the Freshman Fling.

Yes sir, and now that it's all over, and the Freshmen are safely indoctrinated into the ways and means of Loyola, FRA can relax for another year.

The sun sets on a job well done.

The Godot Quartet+1 were one of the many acts seen at the Tuesday and Wednesday night performances of the variety show.

Fr. G. J. MacGuigan, Associate Dean of Arts

ARTS GRADUATES

Dear Arts Graduates:

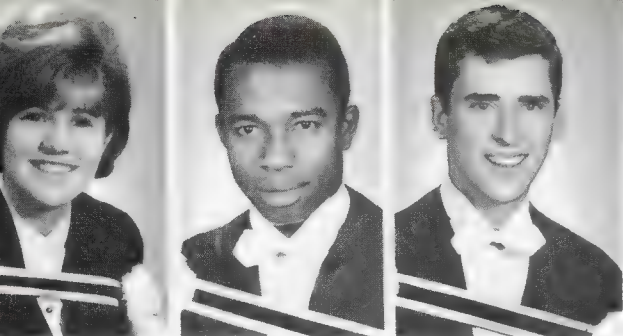

Graduation is not just a day, not just a ceremony lasting a few short hours, but a period of crucial transition; and all transitions are ambiguous. What happens? Is something born? Does something die? Or both? "Were we led all that way for Birth or Death?" Both, I think. But they have this in common: Continuity after crisis.

You have demonstrated that you are capable of sustained intellectual development. But before you will have any opportunity to make an intellectual contribution, speculative or practical, to mankind you will have to fight for survival in a world much larger, more complex and baffling than the university. The habits of initiative, courage and perseverance you acquired while mastering your studies will be at first more important than your knowledge and intellectual skills. And, first and last, other attainments, recognized only on the horizon of any curriculum, will always be more important: love, delicacy of apperceptiveness, and true values.

"May your love continue to grow richer and richer yet, through fulness of knowledge and delicacy of apperceptiveness, so that you may learn to prize the true values." (Paul to the Philippians)

Congratulations, and may God bless you.

PUBLICATIONS

The Board of Publications: (L-R) Valerie Bedard, Danny Laberge, Ian Mackay, Graham Nevin, Jim Routh, Bob Cosman (Chairman), Paula Desgroselliers.

Responsibility of the press is one of those nebulous concepts that have come up for examination and re-evaluation on Canadian campuses in the last few years.

It is no longer possible for college newspapers to be mere bulletin boards. Not now in this time when students are agitating for a new concept of their role in the university community. Not now.

And as is the custom among journalists, it behooves the campus pressman to jump on the bandwagon to try to find some "angle" from which to present the attitudes of the new movement and at the same time maintain the press as an organ of free speech.

The result of this is a conflict. The editor sees that he must develop a responsible and leading press and at the same time must question his right to use his publication to do this. Brainwashing is not good journalism.

And now we come down to the Loyola NEWS.
Hmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmm.

It is true that there is a beginning of some kind of awareness. And the clan concept of the staff is no more. There are masses who now tread their weary way to the offices of the NEWS and fight their way through the dust and smoke to "work".

So maybe that resolves the conflict. Now that there are more people there is wider representation of ideas. So the possibility of leading in expression and yet maintaining a true view of what IS, exists.

The NEWS this year has doubled its size. It has accepted responsibility for dealing with issues. Whether or not the NEWS accomplished its aims of covering events and stirring up constructive controversy is a question that cannot be answered. But the attempt was made and it is a beginning.

And what of the other publications that fill out the annual budget allotment?

Amphora is dead. But in its place comes a new cultural mag. And we await with bated breath its approach in hopes that it will water the arid soil of creativity on this campus.

Rumour persisteth that there will be in future a photography publication, chock full of photo essays, the epitome of visual art.

A new expanded WORD appeared this year with more goodies for the Freshmen, and Arts too published its own handbook. OUR CIRCLE, which bombed this year but will doubtless improve.

And there persists the Arts and Commerce newsletters.

If nothing else, publications at Loyola are extensive. And as long as they persist there is hope of improvement and of development of a strong multivocal culture supplement on this campus.

This year's edition of the football Warriors must, by necessity be a huge disappointment to the school and its diehard fans.

Football had begun again to increase in popularity, until the Warriors came along.

A poor schedule, Mother Nature's non-support, and a catastrophic team all led to the disillusionment with the football image.

The school spirit necessary to promote a winning team could never be found. The team just couldn't generated to get the school behind them.

At last year's final game, 500 stalwarts turned out, and all stayed to the end of the tilt. This year, when the final gun sounded on a 53-0 trouncing by R.M.C. there were more players milling around than fans.

What happened?

Well a combination of things; beginning with Expo tying up some of the players; then a very long pre-season camp which took its toll in injuries and played havoc with the weak at heart; and finally (and probably most killing) a lack of co-ordination between the players and coaches.

Things became better within the team; but this was certainly not evidenced by the scores.

The squad started off the season losing small — 2-1; but ended in a big way—53-0 to R.M.C. Losses were the signal all the way from September 30 right through to November 11 when it all ended.

The season was typified by strong defensive play, except in two games: but lack of offense. Players like Charlie Oxley, John Tackney and Joe Martel all made outstanding contributions on defense; while fellows like Terry Whelan, Doug Maliff, and Claude Thomson proved themselves time after time, going both ways.

For next year we can only take a wait-and-see attitude. Many of this year's Freshmen will be returning and most of them showed that they will have a lot to offer once they gain more experience. The coaching staff too, has seemingly changed after coming to realize the place of football in this college community. And of course there will be no Expo.

So until next time—let's hope compulsory draft, doesn't reach the Loyola campus.

A moment of reflection; the vision of the new brings back the memories of the old. This most time-honoured and respected tradition brings the alumni back to their alma-mater.

They see the new buildings. They see the new faces. This is not their Loyola. They walk through the old halls. They cheer at the football game. This is their Loyola.

At the football game, at the variety show, and at the ball, the old join with the new in the same spirit, joy and enthusiasm that makes the old the new one, in Loyola. This was Homecoming '67.

Ian and Sylvia came to Loyola, and Loyola came to Ian and Sylvia.

From Ian's opening song, "You Were On My Mind", the audience was captivated, and remained such until their closing encore song, "Mr. Spoons."

Even when the curtain was lowered and the lights went on Ian and Sylvia were still there; and they will remain in the hearts of Loyola students for a long time to come. This spectacular event can only be considered as the stellar attraction of Homecoming '67.

Commerce Graduates

TO THE GRADUATES OF 1968

You are fortunate to have graduated at a time when youth has been given an unprecedented opportunity to seek out the better life existing today. Our society has developed new economic, religious and social stratas. An individual with your ability should not have too much difficulty finding your place in the sun.

At times your generation is accused of fighting the establishment and not accepting traditions of the past.

"Our youth now love luxury. They have bad manners, contempt for authority, disrespect for older people. Children nowadays are tyrants. They contradict their parents, chatter before company, gobble their food and tyrannize their teachers."

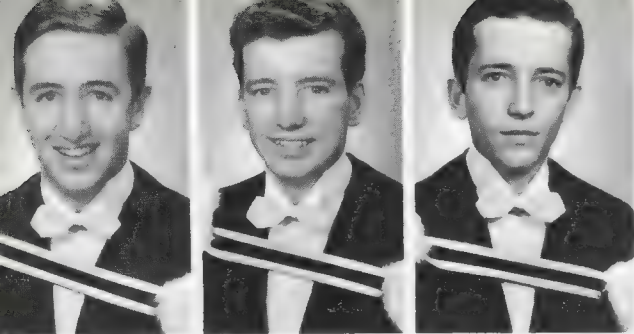

These lines were written by Socrates who lived in the Fifth Century B.C.E.!

My feeling is that youth is basically not different today than it may have been in the past

May I wish you happiness and success in all of your future endeavours. My hope is that you will continue to live in the light of the principles which Loyola has always displayed.

Science Graduates

Dear Graduates,

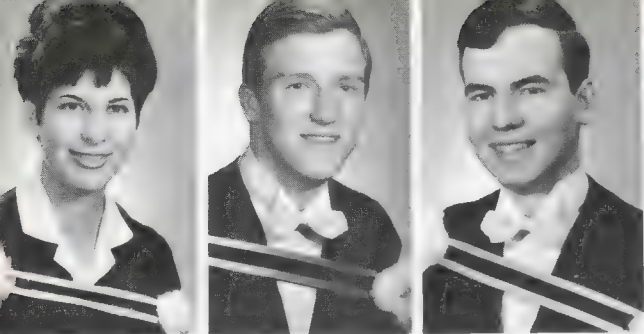

Success has been called a heady wine — probably thousands of years ago. Accomplishment brings to all men a feeling of well-being easily symbolized by wine. Men have always striven to succeed: and when they have done so, they have been glad.

Your success merits our congratulations and well wishes. You are graduating from a faculty that is building up a proud tradition. Last year two Science graduates won the coveted and remunerative Canadian government centennial scholarships. But whether you are planning further academic study or a future in other fields, each of you has passed a merited milestone.

Carry away with you a deep appreciation of the value of education. The President of the United States in his annual message on education to Congress called for dedication to a fifth freedom — freedom from ignorance. Take with you into your chosen career a dedication to truth which dispels ignorance and — with the help of grace — makes men giants.

May God bless you,

Aloysius Graham, S.J.

Studies-The Campus

*Everything going quietly, into time.
Relationships of newness,
in their fragile age,
one soft paw in front of the other.
Early thoughts, of wind and hair
borne on centuries of moments, and instants of years,
clustered spinning,
they are all going quietly into time.
Like fears and expectations, unconsciously forgotten.*

*Sound of thunderfuls,
and hide your ears,
by hours by days.
One silence
two silence, and there are great and enormous changes occurring within the backyards, of your dreams.
Sundown to seagull,
sundown to rush,
so homeward speeding,
terror on its wings,
while a countless collection of different and serious lightbulbs, are having hysterics.*

*October dancers—
most blackly dancing, on the leaves.
Grey starkness,
ending in pinks and cold.
But October's dancers leap high—and stretching,
can justly by barely reaching,
touch with grace,
the secret depths of early frost and smoke
all caught and (crystallized)
by empty window sills and lonely parks, that echo dancers.*

Apathy in Action

This was a familiar scene at Loyola this year. Students flocked to hear their elected representatives address them on points of vital interest to all.

"Democracy is a tradition that must be instilled in the mind starting from the earliest possible moment." These words were spoken by that object of undergraduate adulation, John F. Kennedy, in an address to the graduating class of George Washington University.

But this is Loyola, where democratic tradition is a long-extinct practice which perished at a time approximately concurrent with the passing of the dodo.

Where else but at Loyola could a panel discussion featuring such distinguished spokesman as Eric Kierans, attract the vast number of 17 people? Where else but at Loyola could the annual meeting of the new student corporation draw less than 20 people (the number includes a substantial press and photography gallery) in two sessions?

This is Loyola of Montreal, where apathy reigns as king of the charnal house known to its intimates (all four of them) as Student Government. Which ranks as the second greatest public misnomer: the prize in this category goes to Adolph Hitler as the leader of the Social Democratic Party.

This is Loyola where the surest way to catch up on sleep is to visit the Cave of the Winds popularly known as the Board of Directors, (or is that Bored of Directors?) where each year the Elsie-the-Borden-Cow award is granted to the member of the Board who manages to muster the finest sequence of nonsequiters and mush-mouthed pronouncements, and display the most advanced case of foot-in-mouth disease. Strange to say, this is easily the closest contest waged all year, with members of the Loyola NEWS (the only human beings who attend these functions) arguing hotly as to the relative merits of the various candidates, of which there is no shortage.

This is Loyola where meetings of the Board of Directors are as stylized as pontifical high masses, with each member in turn, running amok with points of personal privilege, and other nonsense.

This is Loyola, the Vietnam of the West.

This is Loyola, where students were so surprised at this year's prospect of a real live presidential election that, throwing caution to the winds, more than two hundred students actually cast ballots, a dizzying prospect.

This is Loyola politics, a world filled with intrigue worthy of the Byzantine Empire, and petty foolishness worthy of Ralph Cowan, Gilles Gregoire and other luminaries of the convoluted world of politics.

This is Loyola, where the fastest way to lose an audience is to mention the latest inside gossip from that hotbed of "student activism" the SAC offices. In fact, in an informal poll, three out of four students were unable to name its location being unaware of its very existence.

This is Loyola . . . Isn't it . . . ?

Women's Basketball Champs

Our basketball Tommies versus the CFOX "good guys"

Loyola's Varsity Basketball Tommies surprised everyone this year by walking off with the Montreal City League Championship. Their record in League games was a spotless one as they sent all comers down to defeat.

This was the Tommies' second year in the League, their first ever championship. And now they plan to move up. Next year they will enter competition in the Ottawa-Saint Lawrence League, while continuing to play in the Montreal association as well.

A few of the Tommies deserve special recognition for their contributions towards the team's triumph this year. Isabel Brzozowska, named the team's Most Valuable Player, and Madeleine Chabot, Most Improved Player are two, and team captain Maureen Newman rounds out the list.

Women's Varsity sports, it would seem, are no longer an anachronism.

ICE TOMMIES

After their first full season on the blades, prospects for the Loyola Ice Tommies are encouraging despite a disappointing record in play this year. A pretty girl is like a melody but our Ice Tommies looked more like a German Beer Garden band in the old used equipment which they were forced to wear. It was heart-rending to see these dainty girls being compelled to don uniforms that by comparison would make an arab's armpit smell like Chanel No. 5. Despite this and many other impediments, they still managed to win almost 17% of their games — with the one victory coming in the form of a resounding 8-1 defeat hung on St. Joseph's Teachers College. Coach Mike Cullen has suggested that they demand opposing teams to be made to take a sex test before they play a game next year.

Most improved players — and they did improve immensely during the year — on our bevy of beauties, was Louise Ferri with the most valuable player award going to Diane Girard.

SOCCER CHAMPIONS

Nine veterans, five rookies and Coach Betts were faced with the task of living up to last year's club.

The opening two games with R.M.C. and Carleton both came out 1-1 ties and these were games that Loyola could and should have won for they outplayed R.M.C. and missed a penalty shot against Carleton.

Then came C.M.R. and with it the Loyola scoring punch. Before the final whistle had blown Loyola had netted six without a reply.

The game against Sir George, their toughest, in which they had to come back to tie two-all, must have put fire in the club; for in the next three games Loyola felled MacDonald, Bishops and Ottawa Gee-Gee's, 4-2, 9-0, and 7-0 respectively.

Thus at the end of the season there was a three-way tie between Sir George, Loyola, and R.M.C. Sir George was out of the running having lost to R.M.C. The two finalists were now faced with a co-championship. Loyola challenged R.M.C., who refused the game. And so Loyola alone stood for the second year as champion.

This is the saga of Carnival '68.

It is a tale of the biggest party Loyola has ever seen, a party that cost in terms of the university's finances, but returned more than its share in spirit, and in opening up new ideas and opportunities.

The week's activities began with a performance by the Mitchell Trio, (Chad Mitchell minus Chad). Though poorly attended, the show went over well.

And as the eventful week moved ahead, more activities came. There was a fashion show, sponsored by Faini wools and by Boutique Baron, the biggest and best-attended ever at Loyola.

There was Compu-Dance, which opened up a whole new concept in Carnival dating—by computer matches. And with three bands to break up any ice that might have clogged the computers . . . Well last reports were indicative of a success.

Thursday, campus men pulled fair lasses in the college's first human dog-sled race. Round and round the track they ran, racing for the keg of rum Corby's offered as a prize for the winners. Costumed runners and individually designed sleds lent color, and the 'dogs' themselves lent humour. All in all a bright innovation.

After the demise of the turtle race (cruelty to dumb turtles was charged by the S.P.C.A.) an electrical car race among members of the faculty was held in the Gym.

Now, have you ever seen a professor chase a model car across a room???? With this event Carnival '68 scored another victory in fun-for-all.

Beautiful weather heralded the advent of the traditional dru . . . (oops) day up north, Friday at Mont Habitant. Hardy Loyolans wended their way through a day of skiing, dancing, drinking, etc., and lived to attend the crowning event of Carnival . . . The Sno-Ball at the Town and Country.

Bobby Gimby was there with his magic horn, bringing to Loyola what he had brought to the rest of Canada throughout the year . . . the spirit of Canada's Centennial. He blew the tune of Canada's unofficial national anthem and the 2000-odd students present paraded.

And there were the Staccatos with the other side of the dancing for the evening. And if you found a spot on the crowded floor to groove in, you grooved to the best.

There was so much in Carnival. The ice castle which saw the crowning of lovely Queen Cammie Warner, caught the sun every morning and every evening, and stood like a sentinel . . . the symbol of winter's last big fling.

Yep. It was the biggest and the best yet.

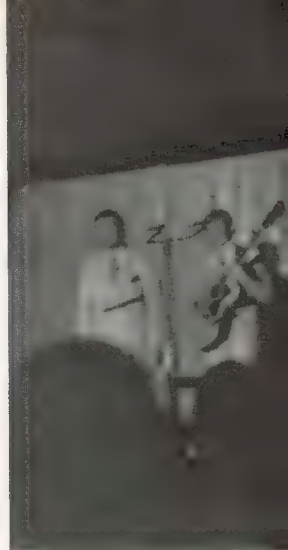

It was Carnival '68.

march was the crowning glory

By Ian MacDonald

It all began in the stifling heat of Mid-August, an unseasonal time for hockey, but it was nonetheless the beginning.

There was Loyola's first ever full time hockey coach, new on the job, adjusting to his surroundings, gently testing the lines of his new authority.

Meeting people, sizing up and being sized up was the first important element of his new position.

And they all came to meet him, and they all were impressed.

There was Loyola Warriors unsalaried, unofficial and highly volatile team advisor Gersh Zalman, a hard man with a natural gentleness, wit and intelligence under a cover of harsh and healthy profanity. The new man appraised him quickly, readily understood why the players leaned on him so heavily, saw the man's usefulness to himself, in spite of wide breaches in personality and style, the two men became hard and fast friends.

And the young men he had inherited from Floyd Curry, came also, anxious that the new man be aware of their style on and off the ice; anxious that he be a man of easy relations and adaptability, for he would need to be both of these things if their relations were to be fruitful and the coming season successful; anxious that he get to know the quirks and shortcomings of every personality, that he be able to instill confidence and provide leadership.

They all told him the same thing, that he had been handed a great college hockey team, great on paper, great in bar-room seminars. He would have to provide the cement and the instinct to make great winners out of great losers.

Just how great wasn't known to him, talk was terrific in August, and lasting impressions were made, but the cutting of hard ice in October was a different book at a different hour.

There were difficulties to overcome at first. Dave Draper had been in the United States for five years, where athletics and hockey were run in a different style, where every coach could be a Vince Lombardi if he so chose to fashion himself, where young men were paid to chase a puck, and it was so different.

On the first official team meeting in September where he saw how different were the attitudes, how set the players in their carefree ways, and he saw he would have to adjust and be flexible. He knew they must want to adjust a little themselves in order to see the wisdom of winning.

That meeting was the first real challenge to his authority, many came late. The players were being deliberately provocative. One superstar insisted his doctor had advised him that beer was better for him than milk. Guffaws were everywhere, and Draper saw his authority being tested early. But he is a deceptive looking man, with boyish features, an engaging smile, a gentle voice, and an easy, loping gait. Seeing the early challenge he responded with an unseen rationale and toughness. "I see your point," he told them, "you play for the fun of it, but winning can be fun, and I intend to show you. In order to win you have to make sacrifices. And I have no intention of being a loser. I hate losing and you better hate it too, or you won't stay very long." That night he suspended two of his best hockey players indefinitely. They all got the message, he was to be the only bossman, he would give where necessary for the general welfare, but he was the boss.

October brought training camp, and an opportunity to see at last who had what. And Dave Draper soon knew all the talk was true. It was a hell of a hockey team, and when it came to make the final cuts, he spent several sleepless nights, asking himself which man would best fit in where.

November. And the season's opener in Ottawa when they scored at will, 18 times in 120 minutes of hockey. And four more easy wins.

But in December, they met their archrivals from downtown, in the Montreal Forum, a team they were supposed to beat by five goals this year. They weren't ready. Ricky Dawson was on his honeymoon, Chris Hayes was on academic sabbatical and Michael Lowe had a case of unwilling knees.

But even without these three, they should have won and Draper knew it, and knew some element was missing. It was a rough month, in Ottawa his twin brother was dying slowly and he was only 27, his wife was ill, and there was a post-Christmas journey to the Brown Tournament in Providence, when the weather screwed up the travel arrangements, and the Brown team tried to carve up his players. But he shrugged and grinned through it all and vowed, "It will all work out in the end."

And soon it did begin to break. January brought the Loyola Centennial Tournament and the making of a hockey team. Warriors drew the invincible Toronto Blues in the finals. "Not invincible", Draper told them, "they lace their skates the same way we do". And in that game they became a team, relying on each other to a man, skating like they could, and like no other team could, shooting the puck instead of setting up the big play, and backchecking. For there was, they knew, no other way to beat Toronto. And they nearly did, up two goals midway in the third period, they seemed to sense the proportions of what they were doing, and they tightened up for five minutes, long enough for Toronto to blink three lights.

They gathered in the Maidenhead, across the street from the Forum, stunned by what they had almost done, knowing at last what they could do, sensing what the future might hold, and really understanding for the first time what Draper had meant by the greatness of winning. An exhausted Bill Doyle vowed a "next time", meaning the National Tournament, the one that really counted.

And they rallied around the coach in an hour of personal crisis when his brother finally succumbed to cancer. Many drove to Ottawa to attend the wake, and they sent the Draper family a message promising to win their championship for young Bruce Draper who had been so gallant and cheated death for so long.

Now the ball rolled, together they played and partied, and helped each other out. And in February they brought home their thirteenth win from Kingston and it clinched their first pennant in nine years. Now they liked the number one feeling and they would not be denied any more. They finished the season 15-1, best in the country, better than 38 other schools.

And March was the crowning glory. The OSL Championship, in their own rink, against archrival Sir George. Draper had been right, all the pieces fell into place. Dawson wanted to play, and no one could touch him in that frame of mind, Hayes was back and he was tough and scared the others, Peter Morin had added comic ability better than Steve Sanderson's, Andy Molino played the pipes and knew at last he was number one in the coach's book. Art Thomas had finally developed into the player he should have been a year before. And every other man was key. They functioned like a passionate computer, and poor Sir George went down at last, and Roger Wilding skated around the ice carrying an old tankard and the fans screamed "WE'RE NUMBER ONE". And yes they were; and "WE WANT TORONTO" and so did the players.

Draper paced the tiled floor in the catacombs deep in the Montreal Forum. His players needed him now. The OSL's they were ready for, but this was the Nationals against Toronto.

Great coaches win great games and he won it in that dressing room. Because for the first time he was inspired. "Listen," he told them "people have been walking around the school all week, and when they met you they wish you good luck, but they don't really mean it, none of them think you have a prayer, they think it was a fluke you came so close to Toronto last time, well I'VE GOT NEWS FOR YOU, IT WAS A FLUKE WE LOST", and now he was pitching his words in capital letters, pivoting as he spoke, glaring wildly at every one, throwing out his hand like Jack Kennedy to make his points. "WE CAN BEAT THESE GUYS AND WE'RE GOING TO AND WE'RE GOING TO MAKE FOOLS OUT OF THOSE PHONIES WHO WISH YOU GOOD LUCK AND THEN SHUDDER FOR YOU." And he turned on the man he would make the focus of the emotions of his players on that night, massive Gersh Zalman was holding up the door, nodding in agreement to everything Dave was saying. Draper pointed to him. "THERE'S PEOPLE THAT CARE ABOUT YOU, GUYS. PEOPLE YOU OWE THIS GAME TO, PEOPLE LIKE THAT BIG JEW IN THE CORNER WHO'S SITTING IN THIS ROOM THAT DOESN'T OWE HIM SOMETHING?" he was pivoting again singling players out, and his tone was soft and the place still except for the water running in the pipes. "What does that big Jew want around you Ricky Dawson, or you Bill Doyle, or you Andy Molino, or you Art Thomas, or you Roger Wilding, or any of you. And yet look what he's done for you, LET'S GO OUT AND WIN FOR THAT BIG JEW! LET'S BEAT TORONTO FOR HIM, LET'S PAY HIM BACK A LITTLE."

There was no way to lose. It took 13 minutes of overtime and a goal by Mike Griffin to break a scoreless tie, but there was no way they would lose.

They lost the National final in the last 17 seconds because they had nothing left, physically or emotionally, they had given it all two nights before and they were spent.

Draper had said it. "We beat Toronto, we beat the best, and as far as I'm concerned, that's when the season ended."

The death of a jinx- and finally in from the cold

. . . But tell that to Michael Lowe and his friends. They were not about to be beaten by anyone on this night. Toronto coach Tom Watt would later say "No one skated with us all year except the Russians, and no one out-skated us, but Loyola skated away from us" . . .

... a berth against University of Toronto, supposedly unbeatable, supposedly Number One in Canada ...

That number one feeling, amply demonstrated and Art Thomas. Hayes had just scored the double indemnity insurance goal in Warriors 6-2 victory over long-time jinx Sir George. The win gave Loyola its first OSL championship in years ...

. . . . four more reasons why
Toronto was not invincible . . .

Athlete of the year Ricky Dawson (19) gets set to drop the puck to all-Canadian forward Chris Hayes. Dawson and Hayes together with Art Thomas formed a trio that Draper only half-jokingly referred to as "my Production Line . . ."

. . . While goalie Andy Molino stood the Blues on their collective ears, kicking out no less than 46 shots over 73 minutes and becoming the only goaltender in Canada to shut out Toronto in recent memory.

... But Molino got lots of help from the likes of ...

Bill Doyle, the all-Canadian defenceman who had vowed "next time" after the Centennial Tournament loss to Toronto, and was prominent in making that 'next time' come about. Norm Chouinard was spectacular on the blueline and big John Donnelly and Steve Sanderson made solid contributions.

...and generally it was obvious to any spectator that second effort made the difference ...

... here, Danny Heffernan pokes away at Toronto goalie John Wrigley's pads, as Captain Roger Wilding looks on hopefully ... while below, Art Thomas comforts a stricken Chris Hayes, who refused to leave the game. . .

All eyes on the puck,
defenceman Bill Doyle (left) and Steve Sanderson, desperately attempt to clear the crease, as a half-screened Andy Molino strains for a better view . . .

Toronto's starry defenceman and captain Peter Speyer hotfoots it after the puck with Ricky Dawson in cool pursuit . . .

On the bench, a profile in leadership . . .

... DAVE DRAPER PACING, contemplating a line change or whatever . . .

... LISTENING, while Ricky Dawson makes a point with Steve Sanderson.

... EXHORTING. Draper has words with Mike Griffin before sending him out to centre a power play in overtime . . .

. . . And suddenly Griffin has the puck in the crease.

IT'S IN! Griffin had taken a pass from Danny McCann (on ice in rear) and knocked it home. In the dressing room before overtime, Draper had told his players, "Shoot the puck. How many picture play goals have you seen in overtime?"

Now, how do you top an act like that? . . .

. . . You try but sometimes you can't . . .

. . . the Production Line. Thomas (10) and Dawson (19) greet Chris Hayes, after the latter scored a breakaway goal in the National Final. Bill Doyle moves in to add congratulations . . .

But much was frustration, that afternoon. Here, Alberta goalie makes a fine glove save off Michael Low. Warriors lost 5-4 in the last 17 seconds . . .

. . . in retrospect, a marvelous season . . .

. . . Summed up here by Dave Draper and team advisor Gersh Zalman who flank Captain Roger Wilding, who holds the tankard symbolic of Oslaa supremacy. Warriors league record of 15-1 plus two playoff wins was the best in Canada.

A Letter

Dear,

You asked me for my views on fraternities. In the following I hope to be able to present to you my feelings and at the same time, give you a better conception of the fraternal organization.

One of the greatest assets of a college education, too frequently overlooked by both educators and students, is one's association with fellow students. Education is more than the cultivation of the mind. It is the education of the whole self — the intellect, the emotions, the will, together with appreciations and values that give meaning to one's life. Similarly, a college is more than a collection of buildings on a campus; laboratories, library or formal classroom instruction. In its ideal aspect, college is a fellowship of mature and immature scholars. It is a community of learning.

The self is a social product. It does not develop in isolation; it is only in interaction with other persons and social groups that one becomes a person. Personality in its fullest dimension is the result of participation in social relationships.

It is for this reason that one's association with his fellow students is an incalculable asset in college education. The value of such association with professors has long been understood. But it is doubtful whether one, during his college experience is aware of the educative value of his association with fellow students in the college community. And yet in retrospect this association is often and best long remembered as the most valuable phase of college experience.

Above I have shown you the aims, or rather the ideal state of the college community. These are sometimes accomplished, but are constantly faced with obstacles. So, too is it with the fraternal organization. The purposes and the ideals of the fraternity are not such that they can be obtained by each brother or even each fraternity. The ideals of the fraternity, which each brother accepts at initiation, merely serves as guidelines in the formation of the ideal type of person each member aspires to be.

Now the fraternity, as I see it, takes the casual association of the campus and organizes it consciously and intentionally as a venture in friendship so that what otherwise might be incidental may become highly productive in the education of the student. This the fraternity does in a number of ways, of which I shall indicate only a few.

The fraternal organization provides a close association in a small sustained and sustaining social group. In a large group the individual tends to get lost in the multitude of general and somewhat vague relationships. Thus with the community reduced to a small homogeneous group, success or failure in the discernment and fulfillment of personal relationships are more open to observation and cultivation or correction than they could possibly be in a large, heterogeneous and impersonal group.

In its ideal state the fraternal organization provides a disciplined association insofar as membership involves the acceptance of obligations and the commitment to ideals. This is, perhaps the bond that unites and differentiates members of fraternal organizations, in what could otherwise be, ANY social organization.

Closely related to the disciplinary influence of the fraternity is the fact that in the group one is assigned or accepts a role. At its best the fraternity stands for an ideal which it seeks to embody in its members. It is a symbol of a type of thinking and of attitudes. In accepting membership one voluntarily accepts the role for which the fraternity stand. The true fraternity man holds before him the picture of the sort of person he would like to become. This fact obviously lays a great responsibility upon the fraternity for cultivating and communicating the highest ideals of the college and of the liberally educated man. Thus we can say that as member of the fraternal group, one is both limited and liberated. Limited in the sense that he has agreed to conform to the ideals of the group; liberated in the sense that he recognizes these ideals as his ideals and finds himself, among those who share his views, free to grow on that basis.

Whatever is said, fraternities and sororities will continue to exist and flourish—to add to the campus—and to provoke discussion within, and about themselves.

A Fraternity Brother

Anyone who is used to writing about events at Loyola has become conditioned to Knocking . . . That's with a capital K. It's an occupational hazard resulting from long association with apathy and the Caf. It is therefore a pleasure to write about this year's Blood Drive, but also a great difficulty, the words have got to be dusted off.

For the second year in a row Loyola surpassed her objective, rather a nicety in a community which is constantly suffering from self-accusation for its shortcomings. The nurses one recalls were astonished at the willingness with which the gapped generation bled a little for somebody else.

The hardest part of all in this, is not-to-knock without becoming hokey. But we'll do it anyway. Congratulations everybody. Kindly be proud.

I get the feeling they forgot the needle!

the champagne will age another year.

"Into every life a little rain must fall," the old saying goes.

For varsity basketball coach Doug Daigneault and the Warriors the watch-word is "man the boats!"

Gifted with a galaxy of stars from south of the border, and boasting a perfect 14-0 record in league play, the hoopsters still finished short of capturing league laurels.

In the playoffs, the injury-ridden Warriors succumbed to an aroused Carleton squad, playing before their rabid fans. The final game saw the cagers hold a five point lead for much of the contest, but weaken in the stretch to finish on the short end of a 59-58 score.

The Warrior's total was their lowest in any game during the season.

All was not dark, however, for the Warriors. An extensive recruiting drive saw outstanding ball-players wearing Loyola uniforms.

At the corners, the Warrior's fielded rough, tough Jack Contos, and crowd-pleasing Earl "the pearl" Lewis, a jumping jack and proficient scorer. Veteran Bob McDonaugh backed up the duo, with swingman Joe Zaganczyk supplying fine moves when called upon. Lanky John Williams was called up from the J.V.'s midway through the year, and was impressive in his substitute role.

Large John McAuliffe at centre, was a first team all-star, and Warrior M.V.P., and the most consistent and dangerous scorer for the Warriors.

Guards Peter Phipps and Jim Ivy displayed perfectly complimentary styles in running the Warrior's attack. Phipps is an offensive specialist with a deadly shot from outside, and great speed, while Ivy is a defensive genius, and the holler guy for the hoopsters.

Team captain John Goettishiem, the Most Improved Player, in his final year, came up with his most outstanding campaign, after a slow start.

Things look pretty hopeful in the Warrior wigwam for next year with only two players graduating and a successful season appears a certainty.

In an unusual pose, Freshman Athlete of the Year, Earl Lewis (in white, number 32) scrambles to get off the floor. Lewis, Loyola's most exciting shooter and jump artist, has been known to look down into the basket to sink his shots, at right, displays more typical form.

The March

This year was unique at Loyola for a number of reasons. First among these was the advent of a new consciousness of the meaning of University, and the meaning of Loyola in this context, by the students. For one glorious week there rose and grew and organized this beautiful thing — commitment.

To say that the reason it grew was somewhat out of line with this glorified description we have given it may be justified. For the spark that set the machinery of 'revolution' in motion leaped from the proverbial pockets of the students. But perhaps some explanation is due the reader.

Think back to March. News leaked out that the college was a classified number of millions in debt, that the government had forwarded no capital grants in the last four years, and showed no signs of doing so in the future; that per capita grants were grossly insufficient to deal with present expenditures; and that if something were not done soon Loyola would either close, or raise its already monumental tuition fees.

It was this situation that prodded the students of Loyola into action. It is safe to say that never had they been so united behind a 'cause', never had they organized so well, never had they worked so hard.

Petitions were brought to Montreal citizens, urging support for the student protest, and their chosen course of action, the march on Quebec.

As the date of the march approached, all Loyola's sons and the entire community she housed rallied to the 'cause'. Plans were laid for members of faculty, administration and alumni to join in the march. It seemed as though nothing could stop its procedure.

But something did. The Quebec government came through with enough financial aid to bail out the university. Enough? Well that's what they said. The government promise in no way concerned per capita grants for the university; nothing was said about a re-definition of status that this would entail. Loyola was still in that educational limbo that is not university, because there is no charter; and not classical college, because it turns out Bachelors of Science, Commerce and Arts; and not pre-university, because Jean-Guy Cardinal promised.

No one, we believe can ever say that the Loyola Community did not do all in its power to fight a circumstance which it felt unjust. The shame of the situation, felt immediately after the march cancellation in a "let-down" syndrome related to a non-victory non-defeat non-collapse, is that we don't even know if we succeeded or failed. We will only know, at that time in the future when for the third time the headlines of the Loyola NEWS read WE MARCH. The next time when we say again "This is the last time."

At any rate this was definitely the one event of the year that brought Loyola, undivided, and un-apathetic, into the news. It is therefore the event of the year.

THE HOLD-UP

This series of pictures was taken by a cleverly disguised Review reporter. The first shows the gang inside the Bank, holding staff at bay.

The second shows their daring break-away into busy Sherbrooke Street.

FLASH*

It has been reported that three students of Loyola of Montreal, desperate about the financial situation of their beloved university, this morning held up a west-end branch of the City and District Bank.

The students, dressed unobtrusively in typical college attire, using winter scarves as masks, entered the bank early this morning, forcing employees to stand still, hands raised, while they went about their felonious business.

The students, whose identity is unknown, have not been apprehended, as of printing deadline.

No further details are known at present.

In the third, they begin their getaway toward... where else? Loyola.

Graduation

"Everything about this occasion — the procession, gowns, roses, speeches, and the conferring of degrees—is part of an elaborate symbolic let's pretend."

—Northrop Frye
Convocation address

Gowned graduates proceed to the quadrangle. It is a sunny day, and Loyola is graduating a record number of Bachelors, in Arts, Science and Commerce. It is a fine day. One remembers fine days.

Convocation

Graduation Ball

1968

Dr. Northrop Frye, University of Toronto's contribution towards Loyola's finest-ever Convocation.

"The statement that you have now finished your studies and are ready to go out into the world was always a silly one. In 1968, a year of unprecedented student unrest, it is intolerable."

"But if there is more frankness and less hypocrisy, we do not need to pretend out of politeness, that students are more mature than they ought to be. I have known a great many mature students, and a depressing lot they are, with their Bridge and their Readers' Digest and their general air of being now exactly what they will be in thirty years. Give me the immature student every time."

Hospitality. Walk through our door. In the midst of Montreal's hustle, the lobby is quiet. Soft carpets. High ceilings. Lights softly aglow. Elegance — but a friendly elegance... And your room. Spacious, comfortable. Like the rest of the Windsor. Restaurants? Choose the richly muralled La Loire, the gaiety of La Réserve or the panelled ease of The Lantern with its new exciting seafood bar. Everywhere the Windsor's hospitality awaits you.

It just wouldn't be right to close off this book without saying some few words about the people who helped and hindered its production. There was a staff, put together some time between July and Join Day and reinforced when the troops fell in battle; they helped; which may have something to do with the fact that they all now occupy padded cells.

Then there was the photo department, about which, in the spirit of Christian charity I shall say nothing.

Ian Garden the advertising manager sold more ads in less time than even Superadman. Thanx.

And special thanks and a couple of Review seals of approval go out to the Honeycomb Kid and all the Krispie Kritters, with the appropriate oriental gestures of homage.

Farewell all,
allannah.

SPARSE INDIGNATION

a diatribe in which are condemned all those practices leading to the present mental condition of the editor. to wit does anybody remember what happened to the pictures of drama's second production? or of the faculty societies? or of . . . a whole lotta things? as we sit in a haze of blue smoke trying to remember how we made it this far . . . where is page 11111? hmmm? and if you guess, you win the peoples of america award for significant incompetance in the face of overwhelming futility . . . so there! rumour hath it that the crispy critters are really corn flakes in disguise and after all what can you expect from a soggy cornflake. God bless tiny tim, many a curly hair has wrinkled out on me. blessed are those who keep the royal coffers for them postage stamps cost too much. to those who hold the power if life and obsolescence we send a black mare changing directions in mid-stream. let them eat cake . . . and bad raisin pies. i leave with the words of a famous jumping bumping thumping stumper who once said "eschew obfuscation".
